Military Champions Character and Form Unequaled in American Show Ring

A few years ago horse show followers ignored the army entries in all shows. Army horses were dubbed tags," and a cavalry officer who won a fourth ribbon against a class of civilian stable entries received an ovation on leaving the ring. At the opening of the thirty-seventh annual National Horse Show at Squadron A Armery yesterday the army mounts secred clean-cut victories against all comers and displayed character and form that have been unequaled in any comers and displayed character and form that have been unequaled in any imerican show ring in many years. The remarkable devalopment of the army house was the outstanding feature of yesterday's show. Experienced horsemen and breeders declared the improvement of the army horse sensational. The result was attributed to the personal selection and careful training by individual cavalry officers at the various army training schools. In the opening class of the day two horses from the cavalry school at Fort Riley, Kansas, defeated the champions of all the earlier shows of the year.

Although the box seats have been rised this year so as to afford an unrestricted view to the box holders, many members of society witnessed the show from the promenades built along the ringside. Debutantes carried trays of flowers and candy through the trough in their colorful full dress uniforms paraded in front of the boxes.

Mr. Alfred B. Maclay, president of the National Horse Show Association, when saked what he thought of the mewing of the show from the old Garden at Madison Square, said that the sea shows could not be compared. The stables open to exhibitors at the Armory surpassed anything that the Garden might offer, he said. Mr. Maclay said that the horses being exhibited today were far superior to the horses of years ago when some claimed the show horse was more popular. Unlike other sports where old-timers insist that the brightest period always existed in memories and by-gone years, all the old horsemen at the armory yesterday the will be forced to remain away from a horse show for the first time in many wars. Mathhessen's Sinbad ridden by Quinn Davis, fought it out with H. N. Greis's Eastern Star, ridden by Del Holman, for a $1,500 special purse in a five-gate event. A five-gate class is an innovation to Eastern horse shows. Horses are shown under every conceivable movement of locomotion possible. The fox trot was the favorite stride with the spectators and both harses had their supporters. Sinbad the California horse, finally won tedecision. Each owner had contributed $500 to the purse and the Association contributed an additional $500.

Miss Becky Lanler wins

Miss Becky Lanler, obviously the favorite exhibitor of the show, was unable to put over a winner because of the performances of the army entries until the final class, when she secured second and third ribbons. John McE. Bowman won this class with his Dansant.

The novice ponies brought out a number of young riders, with Miss Becky Lanler, the younger sister to Miss Becky Lanler, riding Miss Clara S. Peck's Midnight Frolic. Young Grover McLane p t Fernbrook Farm's Drumfire through the trot and canter, and the competition between these two youngsters brought forth considerable applause. Miss Sally Lanier won the blue by putting Midnight Frolic through an exceptional exhibition.

Biley, Kansas, defeated the champions of all the earlier shows of the year.

Miss Becky Lanier's champion Silver Crest and prominent jumpers such as Jasbo. Down East, Bolling, Melchester, Moonshine and others from private stables, after making clean performances, were outclassed by Mosos and Raven, two Fort Riley entries.

Setting Is Ideal

The National show this year is being conducted in ideal surroundings. The decorations, according to old horsement, surpass anything that has been attempted in this country. The Mount Vernon scene of last year has been improved upon by a staff of architects who spared nothing in turning the building into a picture that rivals the most costly show ring abroad.

A blue and white tabric bunting has been hung across the ceiling which lides the black, ungainly girders of last year, and, besides adding a sky effect, reflects the ceiling lights in such a way as to add to the illumination of the building at night. The porth of the tea room is used agn as a tea room run for charity. The eplicas of the old schoolhouse, the brewing house and dairy at Mount Vernon with the Potomac in the background.

coaching equipment has always been a national feature, was unable to attend yesterday's show because of illness and his friends said last night that it is likely he will be forced to remain away from a horse show for the first time in many years. Mr. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, another prominent horseman, visited the show in the afternoon and sat in the judges box in the center of the ring. Mr. Vanderbilt left around o'clock, and arranged to give a luncheon on the porch of Mount Vernon for the Hackney Society on Wednesday afternoon.

Do Exhibition Riding

New Yorkers were shown what United lates cavalry troops can do in the lates are lates and selectification was given by twenty alrymen from Fort Myer. They entailed the ring in file formation, standing in their stirrups, and their work was a sensational exhibition of human and equine skill. The troopers dashed across the ring, riding at each other.
